SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION: The Reclamation Act of 1902 established a Federal program for irrigation project construction and financing to create farming opportunities and thereby encourage the economic development of the arid West. In recognition of organizational, economic, and technological changes in farming that occurred since 1902, the Reclamation Reform Act of 1982 (RRA), Title II, Public Law 97-293 (96 Stat. 1263), was signed into law on October 12, 1982. The RRA revised the threshold of acres upon which a landowner could receive Reclamation irrigation water. RRA provisions established how much land upon which a landowner could receive Reclamation irrigation water, established reporting requirements and water conservation planning, and set specific criteria for the price at which an individual or legal entity could receive Reclamation water. Amendments to the RRA were included in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of December 22, 1987 (Reconciliation Act), Title V, Public Law 100-203 (101 Stat. 1330).

Rules and regulations for implementing the RRA, initially becoming effective on January 5, 1984, were amended in 1987, 1988, and 1991. Environmental assessments and associated supplements were prepared in 1983, 1987, and 1988 that resulted in "Findings of No Significant Impact" from implementation of the proposed rules and regulations.

A lawsuit was filed by NRDC et al., challenging in part the inadequacy of the environmental documentation prepared for the 1987 and 1988 amendments to the rules. In September 1993, NRDC et al., the Department of Justice, and the Department of the Interior entered into a contract for the settlement of the lawsuit. Reclamation agreed to comprehensively reexamine implementation of the RRA and existing regulations, possibly resulting in the adoption of revised regulations implementing RRA requirements on a Westwide basis.

The DEIS presents impact analyses of five alternatives, including no action, that encompass varying levels of regulation necessary to implement the RRA as it currently exists. A Proposed Rule Alternative reflects potential impacts associated with implementing the proposed rules and regulations.

Because the DEIS is programmatic, alternatives were not quantitatively analyzed. Specific assumptions were made to estimate changes to lands, soils, drainage, water, water quality, biological, socioeconomic, recreation, and cultural resources resulting from specific rule changes. While the significance of these impacts on a Westwide basis is small, localized impacts could be significant. Future site-specific actions resulting from any acreage limitation or water conservation provisions will be subject to all applicable Federal laws, including the National Environmental Policy Act.

Dated: March 17, 1995.

Director, Operations.
